

If people are willing to pay for radio they should be able to listen to what they want. People who don't want to listen to a certain channel because it offends them have the right to change the channel or they don't have to subscribe to satellite radio. It seems to me that there really isn't any difference between this and Pay Per View television or what some want to see on the internet. If it offends anyone, change the channel or don't subscribe. I work shift work at a coal mine and listen to satellite radio to help get through a 15 hr. day, there is also a block for children that can be used, why not if it offends people they leave the block on and never hear anything they don't want to. I personally think we are getting too caught up in protecting 'special interest groups' with alot of money but not knowing what they are fighting for. Thank you for reading my letter.

John Ludemann